THE SAME BASCOM THOMAS.

State Senator Bascom Thomas was here a short time ago and made a red hot speech, charging many things against various state officials and reading some correspondence that sounded bad. But here's an interesting letter that he did not read to his audience, and yet it is part of the record. Bascom should come on down the line and read all of the evidence. Hear this:

Hon. J. H. Bickett, Cameron, Texas: Dear Sir—I write you concerning a matter which is strictly sub rosa and I trust you will never reveal anything I say to you in confidence. As you are aware, I am now in the comptroller's office. Now, then, to the point: I have an ambition to go higher, and if merit and political influence are worthy of recognition I see no reason why my hopes should be in vain. In the treasurer's office there are two desks that pay better than the one I occupy. If you are elected I would like to have the first desk, or hold a seat next to you when the fatted calf

Governor William Spry.

Utah Executive, Who Objected to Big Prizefight.

COPYRIGHT, 1910 BY PAUL THOMPSON

Governor Spry of Utah filled a large place in the sporting public's eye recently by announcing that he would call out the state troops if necessary to prevent the Jeffries-Johnson fight from taking place in his state.

bank full and in some places danger warnings have been sent out. Texas is as wet just now as if Colquitt was governor.

A Pennsylvania robber has succeeded in getting away with $32,000 of the Adams Express company's money. For a state like Pennsylvania that is going pretty strong.

The astronomers do not know where they are with regard to the passing of the earth through the comet tail. The opinion seems to be growing that it never touched us.

There never was a more auspicious time for using the split log drag than right now, and there never was a better street and road machine devised. And the drag can be built for almost nothing.

Don't question the merits of the split log drag. The national government has tried it out and says it does the work. To take an opposite stand shows that you do not know what you are talking about.

The spokesmen for Senator Bascom in Texas deny that the senator wrote any such letter as the Russell letter. Then some one has been very wicked. If it is a forgery it could easily be proven, we should think.

In an effort to drive mosquitoes from a house in Houston the house was set fire and destroyed. How strange! We had been told by a famous Houstonian that the mosquito was unknown in that heavenly town. We find out things about Houston every day.

The Herald has absolute faith in the merits of the split log drag, and the evidence offered by the originator, as printed in these columns yesterday should convince any man of open mind that the drag will do the work claimed for it. The Herald reproduced the article yesterday in the hope that some one would give the drag a test on the streets now in prime condition for such a test. Certainly the streets need the attention.

A gentleman reminds the Herald that most of the successful farming is done by farmers and not by experts writing in the papers. He says the practical farmer is the man who delivers the goods. The Herald is in full accord with this opinion. But our ideas may differ materially as to who is a practical farmer. Certainly the man who goes into the field, turns his land over with the first kind of a plow that comes to hand and drops seed not selected with any special care, and lets it go at that, is not the practical farmer. But the man who cultivates his lands to the best advantage, who studies the needs of the soil and supplies its deficiencies with proper fertilizers, who selects his seed with greatest care, and plants in soil best adapted to a certain crop, who conserves the moisture and works his fields and helps the plants to thrive, and who uses all of the knowledge in making the usual waste of the farm serve some purpose, is the practical farmer. And we don't care whether a man gets his knowledge first hand from the field of experience or whether he learns it from the experience of others, if he uses it successfully he is a practical and successful farmer.
